	What course do you feel added the most to your experience as a counseling student? Why?
		Student 1: I felt my ethics course and my practice course were the two most important for my experience. Ethics is a very serious and practical component to being a counselor and I felt more protected going into practicum and internship knowing that I had the knowledge to act in an ethical fashion, even if my skills were still immature. The practice course is a students first experience to what it really means to be a counselor. I appreciated that this course focused less on techniques and more about the person of a therapist. I felt comfortable sitting in a room with a client after being taught what it means to be an empathic party in the relationship. I also appreciated the emphasis put on the relationship between the counselor and client that was highlighted in the practice course.
		Student 2: Multicultural counseling, the coursework, the topics, and the guest speaker opened my eyes to so many things in everyday life that I take for granted or simply overlook, it made me hypersensitive the the needs of individuals with disabilities.
		Student 3: Counseling Theories Intro to couples and marriage counseling Intro to Substance Abuse Group Counseling From all of the above courses and others I have learned something essential to myself and my desire to help others.
		Student 4: No Response

		Student 5: It's hard for me to pick one class. However, if I had to pick just one- I would have to say the multicultural counseling class left the biggest impression on me. The material taught to me in this class has been used the most in my practicum and internship one and two work. For this reason, I feel the multicultural counseling class added the most to my education.

	What course did you feel was the least helpful to you? Why?
		Student 1: I believe that my philosophy course was the least helpful because, in my opinion, philosophy is an extremely subjective idea. While the topic is interesting and can certainly stimulate conversation, I didn't feel that it enhanced my role as a counselor much.
		Student 2: I think all the courses were beneficial in their own way.
		Student 3: None. All of the courses were foundational.
		Student 4: No Response
		Student 5: Philosophy. Hands down- philosophy. I think the professor I had for this class did not present the material in a way I could easily grasp. However, this teacher left the program this past semester so I am hopeful that the material will be presented differently in the future for future students.

	Please list any suggestions or comments you have about the curriculum:
		Student 1: I know that theories is a course that needs to be taken early on so students are exposed to particular theories as they get deeper into the core of the curriculum but I had my theories course my first semester in the program and it went right over my head. Knowing what I know now, I realize how much I did not understand what each theory was really about. I think theories would be better suited a little later in the program when the idea of "being a counselor" is more fully established. Another comment I have is in regards to the school counseling track. I feel as though students who are interning in a school should possibly have different criteria for internship class than those in an agency setting. I don't mean fewer hours but by nature, a school setting is not set up for the counselor to see 10 students a day for an hour each. This suggestion goes for the other tracks as well. If a student wants to be a marriage and family therapist I think they should have requirements that reflect their work with couples and families. If all the track consists of is one extra elective, I don't see a person being highly specialized when they graduate.

		Student 5: Some teachers relied heavily on videos to teach students during class time. I felt that it was a waste of time and tuition to be taught by a video. However, videos can be beneficial if used as a supplement to existing course work and traditional lecture.

		Student 5: The faculty and staff in the counseling department are all fantastic! I have no suggestions but thousands of comments. I'll complete this exit survey with this - "Thank you, Thank you, Thank you ALL for teaching me and molding me into the young professional I am. I will take your teachings with me and carry them both in my mind and close to my heart always." :)

	Would you recommend this program to potential students? Why or why not?
		Student 1: I would recommend this program. I think the program does a great job of establishing the foundation to be a professional, competent counselor and I don't know that other programs would accomplish that as well.
		Student 2: Yes, it was a challenging masters program, which is what I wanted, and it was a great experience.
		Student 3: I would definitely recommend this program to potential students because I had a great experience at Loyola, since I believe that not only have I grown academically but I've grown to be a better person.
